

A substantial effort to better the County School system during the third quarter of the 19th century (1850 - 1875) can not be better illustrated than by listing the number of mid 19th century schoolhouses that remain in Cecil County. Most of them have experienced a change to domesticity but they do support a definite increase in the educational facilities for the county's youth.

School No. 2, or the Fingerboard School as it is locally known, typifies these single story frame structures spotted throughout the county. Most have had smaller sash replacements and numerous interior divisions. Some schoolhouses differ in appearance as will be seen in other entries.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

School No. 2 c. 1855 is an abandoned School building on Glebe Road just north of Earleville, Md. The structure was converted into a residence and later left empty. The typical story and a half frame structure is one of dozens built throughout the county at approximately the same time.

The structure rests on a fieldstone foundation and is sheathed with narrow weatherboard siding. The medium sloped composition tile roof has a brick stove stack rising out of the north slope of the roof.

The south facade is three bays across with a central entrance and modern 6/6 sash. The sash windows were considerably larger before the structure was somewhat remodeled. The entrance appears to have been a window first with a door cut through later. A small shed roof adds protection to the entry. The eaves are extended with the soffits sloped.

The east side is three bays across but the structure is not as deep as long. This appears to have been the primary facade with a central entry and flanking 6/6 sash windows. A double 6/6 sash lights the attic level.

The north side has three windows openings and similar detailing. The west end is the same as previously described for the east end.

The interior was not open for a full inspection but reeded door and windows surrounds have bullseye corner blocks.

A delapidated shed and outhouse are found west of the school building.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

School No. 2 or as it is more widely known, the Fingerboard School House is a typical school building for the mid 19th century. Almost all have been converted into residences which result in alterations. This structure offers no exception to that rule and therefore no more significant than the dozen other structures of its type. A school building was also here in 1858 and called Jamison's School (~~Map~~ Map).
